Short Bio	As a self-taught product of Seattle, Julius extrapolates elements from personal experiences and existential inquiries. While balancing interests of the heart and mind, this intention of attempting to display feelings and thoughts results in the materialization of intangibles into an alluring palpable thought, presented to resonate as a moment.

Short Bio	I am convinced that story is a significant trait of humanity. Something that transcends all other things. In fact, I'd argue it's a part of our DNA. Stories make people listen, it provokes emotions even allowing people to experience things they might never have bothered to understand simply because a story carried them there. I want to help people get to whatever "there" is. That wonderful, floating feeling after a great film. The awe of a new world and the tears of sorrow, anger and joy. I want to be one of the spices which flavor this world as it is seasoned with story. It'll be a rather long journey, but I consider it is my passion to encourage and entertain everyone until the end.

Short Bio	After many years in the corporate world, I took the road of self-expression by putting my love for art and creation into action. I consider myself a self-thought artist, inspired by my Celtic background and my admiration for the form and colors surrounding us. Some of my art pieces are created with lichens. This technique creates a 3-dimensional sculpture on canvas. Each lichen is individually hand painted, one at a time, with acrylic paint. Some of my other pieces follow a more traditional path with still life oil painting, graphite portraits, and

Short Bio	I am an anthropologist by profession, with an area specialty in Japan, although I have also pursued a parallel track as an artist working in paper collage, oils, watercolors, silkscreen, and ceramics. My artwork, like my scholarship, is informed by a "disciplined eclecticism." I have an insatiable curiosity that extends to all forms of artistic and aesthetic expression but am especially influenced by contemporary Japanese printmakers and ceramicists.

Short Bio	Error has been my focus in my art. I don't create error but I do create works that demonstrate the limitations of visual observations. When we look at art we notice color, form, composition, texture, dimensions, even the frames. We absorb only pieces of the whole. Our relationship with the piece is always constructed from what is there as well as what is missing from our observation of it. This is a hopeful circumstance for me because it demonstrates to me that there is always "more." Error is my limitation, but not my end. Rather error becomes my opportunity to find what I hadn't noticed before. Error is my hope for another chance.

Short Bio	Becoming an artist later in life and without formal training, I have found that the creative journey continually surprises bringing joy and fulfillment in unexpected ways. I paint intuitively and find I'm happiest creating figurative portraits and abstracts. I am inspired by the ordinary found in each day especially that which is weathered and old. Through my art, I hope to touch the viewer in a meaningful way, forming a connection by sharing a compelling narrative of vulnerability and strength.
